That s a good deal for a girl to earn, remarked Carl Cummings, as he wrote out the amount contributed. Number Fourteen was Kate Caswell, who had dressed a doll for a neighbor s little girl, for which the mother had paid her forty-five cents. I learned at school how to sew, said she, so I thought it was a good way to pay back to the school. She also took care of the same little girl three times while the mother attended a party, a play, and a concert, and for each time she received fifteen cents. Out of the money, she said, I...
